WHY CHOOSE POLITICAL SCIENCE?

Political Science majors study institutions, governments and power structures in the US and around the world. Key topics include mass media and politics, inequality and political activism, war and peace, and the foundations of democracy. Engaging in independent and rigorous analysis, our majors develop communication and interpersonal skills that allow them to be successful in the workforce. Many of our majors graduate with a job in hand or go on to graduate or law school.

The Political Science program at Rowan prepares students for careers in the public, private, and non-profit sectors. Our majors leave Rowan with a specific skill set related to research and data analysis, policy analysis, public service, quantitative reasoning, and theoretical and philosophical thinking.

THE BOTTOM LINE

The number one element that sets Rowan apart is that our faculty members go the extra mile to ensure that students get the one-on-one assistance they need to achieve their goals. We keep our class sizes small so professors can develop personal relationships with all of our students, and know all students by name. Because we believe in a very hands-on approach to learning, we ensure that our students get the most out of their required internship, making sure they end up working in positions that provide professional preparation for their future careers.

POLITICAL SCIENCE QUICK FACTS

Matthew

“As a highschool student, I recognized my ability and love for exploring and dissecting political systems and processes. I want to help society on a macro level as opposed to a micro level. My Political Science major is preparing me to one day enter the world of politics and craft public policy.”
